Registration open for the World Banknote Summit 2018

January 11, 2018 – Registration is now open for the World Banknote Summit to be held in Frankfurt, Germany, from 24-26 September 2018. True to its signature hallmark, the Summit agenda will focus on banknotes and their role in the payment landscape from different perspective.

The World Banknote Summit pioneered the concept of including experts from outside the banknote community, valuing the importance of their perspectives. This successful approach has influenced the 2018 edition, where once again a mix of carefully chosen topics presented by experts from inside and outside the industry will be on the agenda.

Several Speakers already confirmed

Speakers from Central Banks, State Printing Works, commercial banks, hardware and software manufacturers, as well as fintech enterprises are already confirmed and will look at banknotes and their use in circulation from various angles.

With its focus on quality, both in terms of content and delivery, the World Banknote Summit 2018 is guaranteed to bring fresh views and inspiring insights to the table, with thought-provoking perspectives for participants.

Beat Attinger, Director of the World Banknote Summit, comments: "The strong agenda, which is the result of a series of interviews conducted with key people in the banknote community, and the diligent execution of the Summit will reinforce its value as a meeting point for industry decision makers. Here, they can discuss issues related to currency management, and the role of banknotes in the payment landscape, today and in the future."

Social program made for networking

To accompany the conference agenda, the World Banknote Summit includes a social programme that offers ample networking opportunities in a personal environment. Aside from coffee breaks and lunches, participants will be able to enjoy a dinner in the evenings of the first two conference days, to refresh old friendships and make new acquaintances.
